The Charter Schools and Real-World Practices research project has produced a variety of resources related to high school reform and charter schools. This project at the Center on Education and Work, University of Wisconsin-Madison, yields a wealth of researcher findings, observations, and practical insights. Educational practitioners, researchers, and college personnel who prepare teachers and administrators will learn about instructional practices that connect classrooms to the real world, relate these practices to high school reform, and reflect on how charter school students view their learning experiences. We are pleased to share our discoveries with all educators!

Student Voices from Charter High Schools CD-ROM

This audio CD offers educators a rare opportunity to hear about teaching and learning at charter high schools from students themselves. Recent graduates discuss the nature of their learning experiences and the impact of programs that connect learning to the real world. An accompanying booklet shares findings from a national survey of charter school graduates.

Inside Charter High Schools — Case Studies

A series of in-depth case studies offers valuable lessons on high school reform. Follow the development of ten charter high schools as each responds to the educational challenges that confront it. This thought-provoking series provides rich detail on all aspects of school operations and concludes with student perspectives and researchers' observations.

Case studies are offered individually or as a full set.
